Why You Shouldn't Worry About AI - Until You Should.

We've heard a lot lately about how the machines may be taking over our jobs.

Join Chris Slee, a software engineer from AWH and a group of expert panelists to discuss artificial intelligence and machine learning - and how it will affect your business in the future. You'll leave not only understanding machine learning and AI but what pieces of these cognitive services are available to use in your business today.

Participants will learn:

- The differences between ML and AI
- How machines "learn"
- How businesses are using the technology today
- What are the future of these innovations and how will they affect your enterprise?

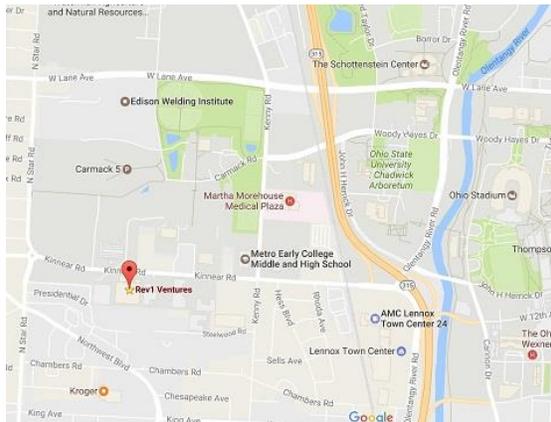

Christopher Slee is the founder and principal of AWH, a Dublin, Ohio software engineering firm currently celebrating its 22nd year of creating great digital products for business clients.

At AWH, Chris leads internal and external development teams across all applications, from web, mobile, and desktop platforms, to virtual reality and machine learning.

Even though Chris has been programming for more than 30-years, he continues to push the technology envelope. From drones to artificial intelligence, Chris Slee continues to exemplify the spirit of continual learning in the tech space.

As a passionate technologist and mentor, Chris founded Dev:Launch, an apprenticeship program where aspiring software developers have the opportunity to work on real client projects alongside experienced development teams. As a mentor, Chris teaches apprentices how to be efficient and productive developers, not just how to write code.

Chris is a graduate and Adjunct Professor of The Ohio State University.
